Doctor Recommends Special Treatment For "Thumbsuckers" CHICAGO — A recommendation that special treatment, both psychological and dental, be given to the child who sucks his thumb beyond the age of three and one-half years was made in the Journal of the American Dental Association. "It is a habit which produces a penalty of subsequent deformity of all proportion to the crime," Dr. Edward S. Mack, of San Francisco, instructor of dentistry for children at the School of Dentistry, College of Physicians and Surgeons, declared. "A feeling that he is loved and is secure should be instilled in the young child," he said. Dr. Mack, however, took issue with the point of view that prevention of thumb-sucking can cause a deep-seated frustration. Pointing out that there are many natural behavior patterns which must be curbed or stopped in the child, he named crying, stealing, showing hate openly for persons, having temper tantrums or putting all available objects in the mouth. "Each of the training processes involving these acts are to a great degree 'frustrations,'" Dr. Mack said. "Since the infant is an infant to put most available matter into his mouth, the stopping of this act is a frustration of a natural behavior pattern. "Compared to the intensity of frustration involved in the mentioned frustrations, thumb-sucking hardly bears mention. It is by no means capable of disturbing the psychic balance to as great an extent as some of these. Yet this habit is not tampered with because of fear of frustration alone." Dr. Mack listed possible effects of thumb-sucking as abnormal development of the jaws, misshapen nose and lip structure, irregular speech, speech defects and mouth breathing that may lead to respiratory infections.

Hummingbird Wing-Beats High as 50 to the Second MONTREAL, Can. — Motion picture studies have revealed that the ruby-throated hummingbirds who breed in Canada and often fly as far south as Panama during the winter have wing beats averaging 50 to the second. Scientists have never been able to discover how these tiny birds keep going on their long flights, although the legends that they hitchhike on the backs of large birds, such as the Canada Goose, are generally not believed. The chimney swift is also something of a traveler. One banded in Ontario was discovered along the Amazon river in Peru.

Birds Place Live Ants In Feathers, Expert Says WASHINGTON, D. C. — A variety of kinds of small birds, among them the hermit thrush, place live ants in their feathers, apparently to rid themselves of feather lice. This curious custom is described in a bulletin on North American thrushes by Arthur Cleveland Bent, issued by the Smithsonian Institution. The birds, according to the bulletin, seize the ants and place them in their feathers, usually under the tailcocks. They may also crush the ants with their bills and rub the juice on their feathers, or they may eat themselves in the ants. Various theories have been advanced to explain this behavior. It is generally believed that both the live ants and the formic acid secretions from the crushed ones repel feather lice. Some believe that birds eat ants for the formic acid, which may act as a medicine to increase muscular energy and expel internal parasites. Mr. Bent describes the hermit thrush as the most glib and expert of North American birds and gives an extensive analysis of its somewhat complicated song. Relatively few, he says, have heard the bird in its natural habitat.

In addition to these items there are items that produce beautiful natural dyes; others yield strong fibers, aromatic oils in great profusion and variety, and vegetable fats and waxes that rival sperm oil in their characteristics," revealed the U.C.L.A. zoologist.

Norse Uncover Clues to Lives of the Vikings

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The discovery of a 1,000-year-old silver hoard, unearthed in excavations at Trondheim, Norway, has brought to light new details for the gradually unfolding story of what life was like in Viking times.

This latest find, which includes old German and Arabic coins, along with pieces minted by 11th-century King Canute and two rare silver crucifixes, is expected to provide additional clues to the far-flung, of conquest and trade followed by Scandinavia's dreaded sea warriors.

Archaeologists already have accumulated a considerable mass of information on the Vikings' character and exploits. From burial sites and household goods, from military camps excavated on Baltic islands, in Scandinavia, Britain, and elsewhere, they have obtained a picture of the Vikings as warriors, traders, and explorers. The Vikings were a people of many talents, and their exploits were many. They were a people of many talents, and their exploits were many. Swiss Resources Switzerland has no oil resources and very little coal, but rushing mountain streams and waterfalls are plentiful. A harnessing of these watersheds would produce an abundance of cheap hydroelectric power. Electricity now runs the country's industries and supplies her plants, which absorb almost half the nation's workers, and lights nearly every Swiss home. The Swiss have a long history of harnessing water power. The paucity of good farming and poses for Switzerland a perennial problem of how to feed her four and a half million people. By peacetime efforts during World War II the nation managed to bring more than a thousand square miles of previously unfarmed land into cultivation, but two-thirds of her people still depend on imported food. The most progressive farms lie on the fertile plains east of the Jura mountains, which serve as a boundary between France and Switzerland.

Dreaming Time Though it is known that one dreams with considerable rapidity, psychologists cannot say how long a dream lasts. Some experiments have shown that in a hypnotic trance a person can, in a few seconds, go through experiences which would take ten minutes when awake. It seems certain that under hypnosis one can arrive at judgments in the case of hypnosis, as with dreams during normal sleep, we are dealing with what is commonly called the unconscious mind.

Zoologist Advises Man To Harvest The Desert LOS ANGELES — Like the Indian, the white man should turn to the desert for a potential supply of valuable agricultural products. This is the opinion of Dr. Raymond B. Cowles, professor of zoology at the Los Angeles campus of the University of California, who specializes in research on the flora and fauna of the desert. He says that selective breeding could turn the millions of square miles of desert-producing plants that land into a supplement for food. By using desert plants, he says, the United States could produce a large part of its food supply. By using desert plants, he says, the United States could produce a large part of its food supply.

Play By Play Account Appomattox-Blackstone Football Game Here Last Friday Night

Play by play account of A. H. S. football game with Blackstone last Friday night in the annual homecoming game:

Blackstone kicked off, Cawthorne recovered and returned 15 yards. Ed Doss and a around left end for a first down at midfield. Mitchell lost 1 yard at the 35. Cawthorne then passed over to Cawthorne for a first down at the 35. Cawthorne then passed over to Cawthorne for a first down at the 35. Cawthorne then passed over to Cawthorne for a first down at the 35.

Blackstone recovered a fumble and had first and 10 on the 34. They made it a first on the 28 with two runs. Four tries failed to yield another first, and Appomattox got possession on its own 18. Cawthorne made a nice cut back run to the 32. Mitchell carried to the 44. In a delayed pass, Cawthorne tossed to Doss at the Blackstone 35, and line blocking enabled Doss to go the way for a touchdown. The extra point try was good.

Appomattox 21, Blackstone 0. A. H. S. kicked off and Blackstone took over on its own 22. They made it first down as the quarter ended.

FOURTH QUARTER Running plays gave a first down on Blackstone's 40. A pass failed, but two line players were good for a first down at midfield. Jamerson broke up an end run. Blackstone lost five yards inside tackle, tried a pass and Appomattox got the ball on the 50. Ed Cawthorne cut back inside his tackle, broke into the Blackstone secondary, side-stepped and twisted for 50 yards and a touchdown. Doss went over center for the extra point and the score was: Appomattox 28, Blackstone 0.

Cawthorne kicked off and Blackstone had possession on its 20. A quarterback sneak was good for a yard. A pass failed and a penalty made it fourth and 21. Cawthorne took in the punt on the 45 and outran the field all the way for a touchdown, but a clipping penalty was called and the ball clattered back to the 45. The Hornets took too much time and drew a 5 yard penalty. Mitchell ran left end to the 20. A fumble lost 2. Mitchell hit center for 3, Johnston went to the 15 and Mitchell failed to make it first down. Blackstone started a march down field, but time ran out with the ball on the A. H. S. 30. Final score: Appomattox 28, Blackstone 0.

NEW N & W CLASSIFICATION YARD Coal dumps at the Norfolk and Western's Lambert's Point piers near Norfolk will be greatly expanded by a new classification yard to be built immediately by the railway. Cost, including a complete car retarder system, will be $1,550,000.

The thirty tracks in the new yard will have a total length of 9.7 miles. Officials said that the improved facilities for switching coal to be delivered to vessels will not only relieve congestion and reduce delays in dumping but will result in quicker release of cars for return to the mines. Preliminary grading on the project has already begun and it is scheduled for completion by next January 15.

Highway Department Safety Conference Lexington, Va., Oct. 10.—An opportunity to hear many highway safety specialists of national stature will record in a record-breaking turnout of over 700 for the three-day sessions of the fifth annual Virginia Highway Conference which opens here at the Virginia Military Institute on Monday.

The conference agenda features the three-day program of highway safety, education, enforcement, and engineering, and has received the enthusiastic endorsement of Governor John S. Battle who urged the participation of county, municipal and state officials.

Drought Hits Crops

The extended drought throughout the Old Dominion is playing havoc with both farm crops and wildlife crops, according to reports coming to the office of the Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries.

Late farm crops are being scorched and water supplies are dwindling throughout the state. To indicate the extent of the dryness in the Piedmont area, the big springs which supply water to the Commission's trout hatchery at Montebello are so low that pumps have had to be installed, so that water can be pumped in from a nearby mountain stream to keep the water levels normal.

Set Up Wildlife Program I. T. Quinn, executive director of the Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries, reports that a meeting with representatives of the George Washington and the Jefferson National Forests was held at the Commission office on October 2. At this meeting a wildlife improvement and management program was set up under the Cooperative National Forest Agreement, between the Commission and the U. S. Forest Service, which was enacted by the General Assembly in 1938.

Mr. Quinn stated that the program will cost the Commission approximately $8,500,000 per year, $8,000 in excess of last year's expenditure for this purpose. The revenue supplied by the Commission will come from Pitman - Robertson funds, which are allocated to the state by the Fish and Wildlife Service, from the funds received from a 10 per cent excise tax placed upon the sale of fur, and from revenues derived from the state and National Forest State Game Lands. The Commission's farm game habitat program will be expanded in the protection of the state's national forests.

Fish Not Harvested Dean Rosebery, assistant chief of the fish division of the Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries, reports that his field biologists are finding that fisherman are not taking enough fish from the waters that have been investigated.

Very high populations of bullhead catfish have been found in Fairystone Lake and Albemarle Lake, previously not thought to contain this type of fish. These fish are going unharvested. It is believed that this situation prevails all over the state, but further surveys will be made to verify or disprove it. The fish division believes that fishermen need to be encouraged to harvest these fish, as they are excellent for eating and provide a good type of sport fishing, as well.
